Air Conditioning Calculator is an interesting program that is useful for calculating the power you need to install for a specific room or area. It does not require the user to have technical knowledge since it does not involve the use of external systems and circuits. The program consists of two modes: “guide” and “calculate”. In the guide mode, you can insert the desired size, volume and any other characteristics of the room and the app will give you the required number of units to install. The app works with five different types of areas: office, workbench, glass, sun facing and internal room, among others. As you can see, Air Conditioning Calculator does not require any knowledge and can be used by anyone to find out how much power the device you are interested in will require. It is quite impressive and does not even require a connection to the internet. It can even be used as a “live” system for measuring. The app has a simple interface and should be easy to figure out by all users. The program installs as a widget that can be moved to any area of the screen. The small frame has a blue background with white text, making everything easy to read. First, you must define the size of the area by adjusting the length and width of the area, while the total volume in meters cubed appears automatically. Further settings enable users to insert various data regarding the use of the room. For instance you can define the number of employees that regularly work in the room and the number of electrical items, such as computers and TVs that produce a lot of heat. There are also several types of areas that can be selected, such as office, marquee, glass, sun facing, internal room, kitchen, cabin, factory and workshop. The program displays recommendations regarding the device’s required duty in Kw and the optimum number of units. The bottom line is that Air Conditioning Calculator is a nice program that can be quite helpful in choosing the right machine. Less experienced individuals should find it easy to handle, thanks to the widget’s overall simplicity and intuitive layout.
